ENCOUNTERS WITH FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT

- People involved in the cannabis industry are unfortunately sometimes at risk of prosecution, incarceration and federal raids.

- If approached by Federal Agents it is best to cooperate, no sudden moves, and keep your hands in plain sight at all times.

- Keep in mind that all cannabis activity, even if obeying state laws, is seen as illegal to federal agents at this time in the United States.

- Do not put your hands on federal law enforcement.

- You do not need to speak to federal law enforcement if asked questions by them.

- It is advisable to not consent to a search if asked.
The best course of action is most often to remain silent and ask to speak to a lawyer.

Federal Law Enforcement can only arrest and detain a person if they are acting on a reasonable suspicion that there is a crime involved.

Federal Agents often try to get people to admit to committing crimes, in this case, being silent and asking to speak with an attorney is again the best course of action.

If detained and placed in jail, it is always advisable to now discuss any information with other prisoners in regards to your specific case.

Keep in mind that telephone calls made in jail are often listened to by jail employees and can be used in court.
